

POST-TRAUMATIC STRESS DISORDER (PTSD)
&
RAPE TRAUMA SYNDROME
(RTS)

Survivors suffer a significant degree of physical and emotional trauma during, immediately following and over a considerable time after the rape.

PHASES:

1. Acute - Reaction occurs within hours of traumatic event. Physical symptoms include: general soreness, pain and discomfort in injured areas. Expressed behaviors such as crying, restlessness, tenseness or controlled behaviors such as masking behind a calm, composed act. Emotionally feeling numb, embarrassed, guilty, powerless, fear, shame, depression, etc.

2. Reorganization - Physical injuries heal and life reorganization begins and learning to cope. It is essential to develop a support system and strengthen coping mechanisms. Eighty percent of survivors change their residence and most intimate relationships will suffer disruption.

3. Resolution - Because this phase sometimes takes a long time to reach, it is not discussed as much. There may be “triggers” that cause setbacks in recovery; however, if help is sought, continued progression can occur. At this point the victim has become a true survivor.
